Someone leaked a bunch of usernames & passwords for some of the Chinese virologists that worked at the Wuhan lab.
Supposedly there's CCTV footage of one of the virologists leaving a block of dry ice containing the virus to melt in the wet market in Wuhan but there's 0 confirmation at the moment.
>>254387636
Check the pastebin, there's literally 2000+ username password combos which is why it was leaked. It'd be pretty impressive to falsify data for that many accounts especially when there's links to the site on other pages suggesting it's actually used by people. We're essentially being used to sweep for information. I wouldn't touch this shit with a 10' pole without a VPN - that's for sure.

This. Proxy into the VPN then connect to another VPN. Make sure all components in your computer are over 10 years old. Every perifial has it's own OS (even mice). Don't think you can lobotomize the hardware in these devices—you can't. You have to use the old stuff that have the older and easier to remove back doors...even then.

People realize that just because some virus uses RNA fro. HIV that doesn't make it AIDS, right? There was a lab in the US using some geneti code from HIV to kill cancer cells.

It can be dangerous, but it also isn't "airborne AIDS" as people may think.

Just search research journals for HIV SARS. Ted was right. These sciencefags have been playing with fire for some time. MANY RESULTS.

Please note that the researchers in this paper are Chinese, and the date is late October 2019. I'm not saying that this is THE virus, but it demonstrates that this kind of chimerism is done often. Literal HIV SARS hybrids.

Because service employees in the USA don't make minimum wage like they do in European countries. As such, if you're working as a waiter/bartender/etc you're not going to be making the minimum amount your state recognizes as necessary to survive. Thus, tipping is considered common courtesy. It's one of a variety of complex issues regarding wages and fair pay that don't have an easy solution, but refusing to tip just makes you kind of an asshole in most people's eyes.

You wouldn't splice a SNP into anything. It's literally one base pair, which at most would change an amino acid. AML983 isn't a cell line found in the ATCC, and a google search for "AML983 HIV" and "AML983 SNP" come up empty.
This kinda strikes me as a LARP or someone trying to stir up schizos. Do we have any more stuff to correlate this with?

Retroviruses inject their genomes into host chromosomes. This makes them attractive vectors for gene therapy and such. There's a lot of speculative problems with it, so most labs are just going with viruses like adeno-associated viruses, since they're entirely harmless to begin with. But a few labs are still working with HIV analogues.

Yeah. They got it to infect HeLa cells, which are an ovarian cancer cell line that is extremely commonly used. If I had to come up with an off-the-cuff theory tying it all together, it'd be more along the lines of looking for a way to create a virus capable of infecting as many tissues as possible, and combining it with a retrovirus for gene therapy. If you have cystic fibrosis, they give you this virus, and instead of making you into a virus protein printer, it gives you a fixed copy of your broken genes. The problem is, the virus gets out while it's still pathogenic, and causes this pandemic.

But the SARS-CoV-2 infects the same tissues as SARS-CoV-1 so I'm not convinced this virus was involved in any gain-of-function studies.

This is more probably correct. It lets them move the narrative from an "organic" source. If the Internet is blaming China, it'll be more believable when the current federal administration comes out with the news. This also makes it harder for the compromised elements of American media to spin-doctor this into a nothing-burger.

Yeah, except for the fact that the leaked passwords work on other sites those emails were used on and often the passwords were re-used for personal or alternative email addresses & accounts as well. There's no way in hell the CCP would be capable of doing a sweep that clean and then leak the usernames and passwords under the assumption they've managed to clean all traces of any information perfectly. For fuck sake they literally removed a staffer's profile picture and page from the Wuhan virology lab website without removing her actual link.

>for our freedomz to work

so what, that's what we want too

unless you're one of those shells that is promoting keeping the western world shut down indefinitely while China brags that their factories are the only ones online?
