Use filters, OP. I use filters to block foalcon and other fetishes I don't like, and spoilers to episodes I haven't seen. They're your friend.
I'm glad the mods have enough decency and maturity not to follow through on OP's wishes. Aryanne is cute.

I hope that shooter burns in Tartarus. Seriously the alt-right. They won't ruin Remove Kebab and that one Initial D song for the rest of us.

Aryanne is very cute. For a Nazi that is. ^^ Kebab? I'm not familiar with that. I've heard of Initial D though.

Would pictures of ponies chasing Aryanne with molotovs be fine? It's not promoting fascism and is actually doing quite the opposite.

There are "oc:aryanne,abuse" images already on the site. They're not rule #0 because she's no one in particular's OC or "ponysonna".

YAY! I'm fine! (I have a ponysona, but I'm fine with people "killing" him in pictures. But, I'm a random pony on the internet, I doubt anyone will draw my oc for any reason.)

I mean, seriously. Yes, the content is bad, but even though the site is under the European law, we still follow under Freedom of Speech.
If you go out and literally start banning alt-right content, you silence somebodies voice and stance.
That is a highly dangerous thing you're not seeing clearly.
You silence once voice, you silence a lot more, and that triggers a domino effect in which other point of views can concurrently be silenced.
If we like, banned [place political ideal here], you end up giving one side more of a voice, but the other side that's for it has none.
Just saying, something like this is very poor judgement, a slippery slope, and can cause everything to unravel.
I say keep it.

"Hate speech is NOT free speech. Everyone hate speech is permitted it costs someone part of his or her self, part of their self-respect, or part of their sanity. It rips people to shreds and destroys it. Hate speech is anything but free."
Also, it's the freedom of responsible speech. I don't think anyone who hates a person because they were born black or something else they can't control is responsible. But hey, what do I know? I'm just a random autistic sixteen year old on the internet. (Although, I can see why you think that... sort of.)

Hate speech (unfortunately) is free speech.

Anything goes unless it intends to harm, or lie.
Like the media can't just lie and paint a saint as a complete racist without a source and get sued for slander.
Or somebody screaming "BOMB" in a crowded area where people will in a result, run and trample each other.
While hate speech is bad, it is protected. We let the KKK and Nazi parties in America do their little protests and scream some shit about how Jewish people destroy the economy and rule the world and that the Earth is flat.
We just ignore them unless they start brandishing weapons or say explicit things online that could lead to another tragedy.

Isn't the entire point of hate speech to cause harm to certain types of people, just because they're people?

Not exactly since they express their hate for a specific group of people but don't usually end up causing bodily harm or murder. They can and say they hate somebody all they want, but the worst they can do is cause emotional damage unless they just ignore them. And emotional damage doesn't usually fall under illegal circumstances. At least to my knowledge.

Nothing you say here is "protected" if it violates our rules. Whenever anyone promotes any actual, IRL Nazi party or movement here we delete their posts.
@Dave33333
You also don't get to intentionally cause "emotional damage" to others here.
If you want to talk about your freedom of speech, go to the political thread.

Hate speech can directly, and usually does, lead to hate crimes, which do physical damage. (This probably belongs in the political thread, but since I don't feel like going there, I'm going to leave it there and drop it like it's hot and burning my skin.)

I frankly feel offended that someone takes a tragic event, and uses it for an anti-freespeecc agenda like this. That "link" between the two is nonsense. A school shooter doesn't browse Derpibooru and say: "YES! a nazi parody has 100 upvotes! THE MASSES HAVE SIDED WITH ME, time to bring on the murder!" If you panic so bad every time a bad thing happens somewhere in the world that you go as far as trying to enforce a society-wide ban on anything tangentially related to a subject, you are NOT being a force for good. You're just abusing a tragedy to create arbitrary limitations on freedom. You might even be scapegoating people for something they had nothing to do with.
You could as well say something like, "in the light of the recent swine fever epidemic in China/Africa, we can no longer treat meat eating as a joke - remove all the "carnivore Twilight" memes!"
As stated, blatant incitement to hatred is regulated on the site. Parodies do not fall under this nor should they. Currently you (OP) are one step away from blending edgy teens and parodists in the same group as nazis an murderer. I do hope you don't take that plunge.

^To clarify: this has actually happened to me a few times. There'd be, say, a book with a black character and someone would scream "this book is racist! we must destroy it! everyone who enjoys it is racist too and probably has other crimes!" and you're like: no, it's not...it literally just has a black character. In fact excluding it would be MORE racist. And they'd be like: "omg you're a racist too! DESTROYBAN/whatever. This happens very easily when you adopt a mindset like OP.
There's something so contradictory and misguided when you claim to be out to stop hate and try to achieve it by creating more hate towards unrelated, undeserving things. These "solutions" are never aimed towards actual help or solution of the problems or tragediesthey cite. They just exploit them, which is fairly disgusting. They are always easy target goals that don't help but may make one feel better? And at the cost of putting a stigma on others. It's...yeah, don't do it, just don't.
